

Quality Goods Our Motto.

Navy Beans 11c Pound

New Stock

Try Our Sultana Brand Coffee

40c Pound It's Better

EXTRA LARGE GRAPE FRUIT 10c Apiece

A. & P. BUTTER 60c Pound Genuine Creamery

SCOTCH PEAS 13c Pound

FREE! FREE! With 1-lb. Can of A. & P. Pure Baking Powder, 50c. One Gray or Blue Enamelled Mixing Bowl

Quaker Rolled Oats 6c Pound

NEW YORK STATE FULL CREAM CHEESE, LB. 38c

Grandmother's Wheat Farina 20c Pkg. Same as Cream of Wheat—Same Size Package.

CRISCO 1-lb. Can, 32c 3-lb. Can, 95c 6-lb. Can, $1.85

Wesson Oil, Pint, 38c

SWIFT'S OLEOMARGARINE Premium, lb., 37c Nut Margarine, lb., 35c

The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. 177 1/2 S. MAIN ST. Phone—Main 49-5500; New 49

Free Deliveries.

MULFORD'S WATCHES

Are more than mere watches—
They are real Timepieces

Each and every watch is thoroughly examined by an expert watchmaker and tested for its timekeeping, before being placed in our stock or offered to our customers.

All the standard makes, including ELGIN, WALTHAM, HAMILTON, ILLINOIS, FINE SWISS and others that are dependable timekeepers.

Bracelet Watches $17.50 to $100

WE HAVE THE BEST REPAIR DEPARTMENT IN THE SOUTH

Mulford Jewelry Co.

"Memphis' Oldest Jewelers"

6 SOUTH MAIN ST.

Famous Chemist in Laboratory Test Finds that Muco-Solvent Totally Destroys Diphtheria Germs

In a laboratory investigation made by Dr. H. M. Deavitt, a consulting chemist of Chicago, Diphtheria and Typhoid bacilli of the most virulent form were submitted to fifteen different tests to determine the germicidal strength of Muco-Solvent, a specific for the treatment of nose, throat and all membranous diseases. Dr. Deavitt's report confirms previous tests and affords abundant proof of the strong germicidal properties of this wonderful medicine.

I have personally submitted Muco-Solvent to careful and exhaustive bacteriological tests to determine its germicidal properties, with special reference to the bacillus diphtheriae and bacillus typhosus, and I beg to report as follows:

Both full-strength and diluted samples of Muco-Solvent were used in making my examination.

Vigorous broth cultures of B. diphtheriae and B. typhosus germs were respectively exposed to Muco-Solvent mixture for periods varying from five to thirty-seven minutes, altogether fifteen tests being made.

These solutions were then inoculated for forty-eight hours at 37.5 degrees C., and in no case were living organisms recovered, indicating that Muco-Solvent possesses decided germicidal properties.

Control tests with the same cultures not exposed to the action of the preparation established the vitality of the organisms used and their ability to grow vigorously under the conditions of the test.

H. M. DEAVITT, Consulting Chemist, (Formerly Chemist for the Illinois State Board of Pharmacy) Chicago.

Muco-Solvent a specific for Influenza, Colds, Coughs, Croup, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Whooping Cough, Bronchial Troubles, Diphtheria, and those diseases that attack the mucous membrane.

Muco-Solvent not only destroys Diphtheria and Typhoid bacilli, but is equally hostile to all other disease germs.

This remarkable medicine had its origin some 30 years ago in the private practice of Dr. L. W. Coffin, a prominent physician and throat specialist of New York, Wis.

Its success in the treatment of Colds, Coughs, Catarrh, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Diphtheria and all diseases of the mucous membranes, has been phenomenal.

Muco-Solvent is a purely vegetable compound, and, while possessing strong antiseptic properties, is absolutely harmless. It is taken internally or may be used in the spray or douche, or as a gargle. It is highly effective in treating abrasions, burns, cuts or wounds of any kind.

Muco-Solvent in no sense displaces the physician, whose care is always advisable in serious illness. Nor does Muco-Solvent interfere with or neutralize any other treatment that may be administered at the same time.

You should have Muco-Solvent on hand at all times for emergencies of serious illness—for the colds, coughs and sore throat that so frequently result in serious and often fatal maladies.

Get a bottle today—75c or $1.50—at your druggist's. If he cannot supply you, write us, enclosing money order and giving druggist's name, and we will send you a bottle postpaid. Muco-Solvent Company, Memphis, Tenn.

STREET CAR STOCK MAY BE WIPED OUT

J. K. Newman Heads Committee of Bondholders on Reorganizing System.

NEW ORLEANS, March 7.—The American Cities company, a corporation controlling public utilities in Memphis, New Orleans, Nashville, Little Rock, Birmingham, Knoxville and Houston, will be reorganized by a bondholders' committee, headed by J. K. Newman, a financier of this city, and will pass from the control of the United Gas and Electric corporation, of which it was a subsidiary. It was decided at a meeting of bondholders in New York City, according to information reaching here. A new board of directors was elected and a meeting at which plans for reorganization will be worked out will be held March 18, it was said.

Controlling interest in $1,000,000 worth of 5 per cent bonds of the American Cities company is held by a banking firm of which Mr. Newman is head. It was learned in banking circles here. The bondholders' committee is composed of J. K. Newman, chairman, J. H. Dinkins, Archibald Macdonald, Lewis H. Parsons, Percy Warner and H. L. Paik, secretary.

The personnel of the new board is as follows: F. T. Homer, New York; T. H. Fowler, Memphis; Percy Warner, Nashville; J. S. Peavey, Birmingham; D. H. Cantrell, Little Rock; E. D. Parker, Hot Springs; C. H. Hatcher, Knoxville, and Robert Jemison, Birmingham.

Hero's "Lost Leg" Proves Fake So He Is Under Arrest

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 7.—After representing himself as having lost his right leg in the battle of Chateau Thierry while a member of the Fifth marine corps, James O. Jesse, alias Lieut. D. W. Moody, alias Lieut. Frank H. Stamps, who two days ago was given a position as bookkeeper with a local iron corporation on the strength of his war record, was arrested by agents for the department of justice and is being held on charges of impersonating an officer.

Forrest C. Pendleton, chief of the local branch of the department of justice, said Jesse possessed "two legs," and that he is "a pure fake." According to Pendleton, Jesse's home is in McKinney, Tex.

An interesting feature is the fact that a local newspaper carried a picture of Jesse, with a story about his alleged achievements at Chateau Thierry, and how he answered the specifications of the iron corporation, which had previously offered a position to "a sailor or soldier who had lost an arm or leg in service in France." To newspaper men Jesse gave his name as First Lieut. Frank H. Stamps, and when confronted about his "lost leg" retorted: "A man mustn't quit for a little thing like that."

The position with the iron corporation was secured through the local federal employment bureau.

ADMIRAL SIMS CABLES THANKS TO AVIATORS

NEW YORK, March 7.—Admiral Sims, commander of the United States naval forces in European waters, has sent the following wireless message to Alan H. Hawley, president of the Aero club of America:

"Please express to the naval aviators of America my most sincere appreciation of their courageous and loyal performance of duty at home and abroad throughout the war. Their brilliant exploits, their determination to win, will ever remain one of the brightest tributes to American manhood.

"The performance of duty of those young naval aviators under my command has not only been in keeping with the very best traditions but won for America the enthusiastic praise of her allies."

Write to the Bradfield Regulator Company, Dept. A, Lamar Building, Atlanta, Georgia, for an interesting Mother's Friend Book, a bottle of Mother's Friend from the druggist. You will find it the greatest kind of help.

Before The Advent Of Woman's Gladness

Women Who Know Take Precaution Against Suffering.

Before the arrival of the Stork, women for over half a century have learned the wisdom of giving nature a helping hand. Sickness, nervousness, bearing down and stretching pains in the abdomen and muscles are entirely avoided by the use of Mother's Friend, according to the testimony of thousands of mothers who have used this time-honored remedy.

Mother's Friend lubricates the fine network of nerves beneath the skin, and by regular use during the period the muscles are made more pliable and elastic. They can then expand gently and easily when baby is born and pain and danger at the crisis is naturally avoided.

Mother's Friend is a preparation of penetrating, unguineous medicinal agents prepared especially for expectant mothers. It is for external use, is absolutely safe and should be used regularly during the entire period before baby comes.

Write to the Bradfield Regulator Company, Dept. A, Lamar Building, Atlanta, Georgia, for an interesting Mother's Friend Book, a bottle of Mother's Friend from the druggist. You will find it the greatest kind of help.

"Proved Safe by Millions."

ASPIRIN

For Colds Rheumatism Headache Neuralgia Grippe Lumbago Influenza Pain

Adults can take one or two "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" with water. If necessary, take three times a day, after meals.

"Bayer Tablets of Aspirin."

20-cent packages—Larger sizes.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacturing of Monocrocinolide of Salicylic Acid.

MILITARY, NAVAL AND AERIAL TERMS BEING SHAPED UP

Allied Council Spends Thursday and Friday Discussing Final Measures To Be Imposed Upon Germany.

PARIS, March 7. (By the Associated Press).—The military, naval and aerial terms of German disarmament were before the council of the great powers yesterday with Premier Lloyd George at the head of the British delegation, Marshal Foch and the full membership of the war council present. Most of the time was given to the naval terms, which were largely settled with several features still reserved, including destruction of the large German ships.

Premier Lloyd George was disposed to have England take part of these ships, but he yielded this view when shown that it would involve an increased naval building program in the United States.

As a result of the British and American agreement, and as means of harmonizing the French and Italian views, it is possible that some of these ships will be apportioned to France and Italy instead of being destroyed.

As terms for dismantling fortifications of Kiel canal were causing discussion, the council adopted a motion referring the Kiel question to the commission on waterways. This commission will now consider the whole subject, including the American reservations that the action on the Kiel canal shall not be a precedent affecting American canals and waterways capable of being used for strategic purposes.

The council also adopted the American proposal requiring a commission to submit with its report the specific form of an article to be presented in the peace treaty. The purpose of this is to give the council the specific terms of a subject instead of a lengthy report from which the council may frame terms.

The session today was devoted to the military terms and the feeding of Bosnia, Jugo-Slavia, Austria and Germany. This question of feeding is regarded as increasingly urgent, as reports indicate that lack of food is spreading the revolutionary menace.

Time Big Problem.

Aside from the actual military and naval terms under consideration, an important question has arisen as to whether these terms will be temporary, as incident to the close of the war, or permanent, holding Germany in subjection for an indefinite period. This last proposal has taken a very definite form as a means for curbing Germany for all time.

As a result of this some of these terms foresee the control of disarmament considerably beyond the period of the present war. This, in turn, has opened a large vista before the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are considered, though not made public, are summarized as follows:

Disarmament down to 200,000 men, consisting of 15 divisions of infantry and five of cavalry, divided into five army corps, with an army headquarters. This makes each of the British and American delegates of possible commitment to occupation and supervision of German affairs for an indefinite period. It also has presented the delicate question how far a defeated nation should permanently lose its national authority to administer affairs.

The actual terms as they are